

1: Who is Planning Aid for London

What does Planning Aid for London do?

Planning Aid for London provides free advice and training on town planning to communities and people who cannot afford professional support. We work with people so they can get involved in planning decisions. This helps you influence decisions on new housing, regeneration, parks, schools, surgeries, pollution and more. It is your right to make your voice heard and we help you do so.

Professional planners, who volunteer with us, provide our advice and training. We share and publish guides and other resources that explain how the planning system work, and what your rights are within it. We also deliver training and workshops on planning to community groups.

Who is Planning Aid for London for?

Planning Aid is for people who want assistance as they see their area change and want to know what planning has to do with it. We help people who cannot afford professional advice. We work within London and can help with topics such as regeneration, housing development, transportation and environmental issues. Examples of questions you can ask us are:

- Why is there so much new development in my area?
- Can I put together a plan for my own community?
- What is neighbourhood planning?
- How do I make a comment on a planning application?
- How do I apply for planning permission?
- How do I take part in the preparing of policies by the council?
- What do I need to appeal against a refusal of planning permission?
- How do I make a representation at a planning committee?

How can I get advice?

The easiest way to ask for advice is by completing the enquiry form on our website. We aim to respond to your question within 5 working days. You will be asked about your personal circumstances to determine if you qualify for our services.

Once we have all the information we need, we will find a volunteer to take on your case. The volunteer will get in touch with you either by phone, email or in person.
