5. How to get involved in the process

Local Plans guide the future development of an area. They are very important in making planning decisions for many years.

Everyone has different values and aims. It is really important to hear from a diverse range of voices.

This is so everyone can have their say when authorities are writing policies and plans.

Local Plans can't solve every issue. But they help guide decisions on housing, infrastructure, and the environment.

Getting involved early means that authorities can think about your views before they make big decisions.

5a. How you can get involved

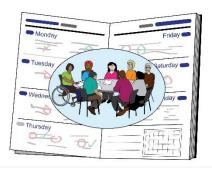

You can get involved in the Local Plan process in lots of different ways:

 Check the Local Development Scheme:

This is available on the local planning authority's website.

Local planning authorities: this is the part of your local council that makes decisions about developments happening in your area.

The Local Development Scheme shows the timetable for making and consulting on the Local Plan.

Look for consultations happening now:

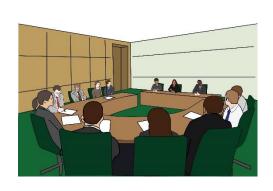

Check the local planning authority's website often. They often ask for views on drafts of policies and plans they are making. You can also sign up to get emails that tell you when consultations are happening.

- Respond to 'Call for Sites': You might own land or know about some land that could be used for future development. If so, you can tell the Council to make them aware.
- Join the mailing list:
 You can ask to be put on the Council's mailing list. This is to get updates on future consultations.

Get in touch with planning policy officers directly:

Lots of Councils are open to discussions. Especially about specific community needs. For example, active travel routes and green spaces.

Go to an Examination in Public:

After a Local Plan is submitted, an independent Inspector holds hearings.

This is to check that the Local Plan is 'sound'.

People who replied to consultations in the past can ask to speak at these hearings.

If you take part in the process early, you can help create a Local Plan that meets your needs.

You can also help make sure that future developments fit in with community aims and wishes.

5b. How can Planning Aid for London help

Planning Aid for London gives free advice, training and support.

This is so that people from underserved communities can make a difference in the planning process.

Underserved communities: this means communities who have less access to resources, services, and opportunities. This is compared to other communities.
